Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 2.

This has been a glorious day for the friends of Grant and Colfax. At an early hour the streets were filled with excited crowds, and the pleasant weather brought out the ladies in full force. The whole city was filled with delegations from all parts of the State, and the enthusiasm was unbounded. No allusion is made to the news from Tammany casting the vote of New York for Seymour.

The Campaign in Chicago.

Preparations for the Grand Torchlight Procession To-Morrow Night.

Meetings Last Evening.

Announcements.

At the meeting session the past citizens of Chicago will assemble in their strength to do battle for the free home of the Union. City of the first election, and they intend to do it in a manner which shall be worthy of the occasion. Let no man, shall this city ever again fall into the hands of traitors. Let it be known to the world, to the nations, the people of Chicago are true to the Union. Before the campaign shall close with the triumphant election of Lincoln and Johnson, the Republican party of this city will be found the ardent political supporters of the principles of American politics. It may truly be said that the Republicans of Chicago are the Union men, and, not yet, belonging to the party as a party, but to the Union as a Union, and to the Union as an institution, and forming themselves of this city are now engaged in rousing to their duty the Union men of the city, and the Union men of the State. Every man who is a friend of the Union, and of the Union and Great Cause, this Saturday night, and to-day, to-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, and
